I want to commend you and your company of excellent craftsmen on the instrument you constructed and installed in the Kimmel Center. I was there for the organ marathaon and was very impressed by the instrument. The last artist who played the Widor did an excellent job of putting your fine instrument through it's paces. Again, congrats on the building of such a fine concert instrument.

Comments: I have just returned from the organ dedication "festivities" in Philadelphia for the new Kimmel Center organ, and I must say it was one of the most wonderful musical experiences in a long time for me! The organ itself is an absolute marvel from both a visual and aural standpoint. The sounds from all parts of the organ blend perfectly with the warm, rich hall in which it has made its home. It makes one want to return as much as possible to hear it played again and again! Congratulations!

Comments: Obviously, I am thrilled at the opening events planned this coming week and weeks following, for the new Fred J. Cooper Organ at the Kimmel Center in Philadelphia. This is truly a "new-event-that-will-be-heard-'round-the-world". Although I am a physician, many kinds of music have been my passion for as long as I can remember. I've studied piano with two teachers (years apart), organ with three teachers (also years apart), and trumpet with three teachers during high school and college. I've been a semi-professional pianist and organist for about 40 years. The Philadelphia Orchestra has been a listening passion since long before I moved to Philadelphia. I loved the Æolian-Skinner organ in the Academy of Music, and studied and practiced on the Æolian-Skinner-Duddey organ at Christ Church in Philly. The prospect of an organ in the Kimmel Center is understandably exciting. I have tickets for the Inaugural Concerts with Latry playing works by Levinson (world-premiere of a commissioned work, "Toward Light"), Samuel Barber's "Toccata Festiva", commissioned for the organ in the Academy of Music and premiered by Psul Callaway/Ormandy in 1960 (later recorded by Biggs/Ormandy), the Poulenc "Organ Concerto" (played often in the Academy of Music, once by Cochereau, recorded by Biggs/Ormandy), and the Saint-Saëns Symphony No. 3 (recorded by the Orchestra with Ormandy four times - all different organs and "venues": Biggs (Symphony Hall, Boston); Biggs (Academy of Music); Fox (Rodgers Touring Organ, Scottish Rite Cathedral, Philadelphia); and [Michael] Murray (Hook & Hastings-Bruce Schultz organ, I think, at the St. Francis de Sales church in Philadelphia). There are numerous other events planned for the opening events in the roughly two weeks that follow -- several organists, some recitals, some with ensembles ranging from the Brass Players of the Philadelphia to the Pittsburgh Symphony Orchestra. This is already too long, but I am thoroughly "ready" for these events to celebrate this phenomenal new organ!

I know very little about the construction practice other than what I've read in William Armstrongs book "Organs for America" and from Philip T. D. Coopers website. Do you ever give tours through your plant. Any information would be greatly appreciated.

Thank You!

I just finished listening to the Pipe Dreams program regarding your organ at the Cathedral of Our Lady of the Angels. I also enjoyed the photos of the same on your website. I can barely imagine what a project that was, and I am impressed by the size and scale of what was accomplished. As an engineer, I an always interested in how a large organ like that goes together. It is as much a work of art on the inside, as well as to look and and hear. Congratulations, and best wishes on the Kimmel Center organ. I am looking forward to it.

I have a question. I'm a grad student in engineering, and I'm really don't have the desire and drive for what I'm studying. I'm going to finish my masters degree this semester. My major is Engineering Science, which is a combo of materials science and engineering and applied physics. My emphasis is on thin film technology in general, and more specifically, in biomaterial applications.

In short, I would like to seek employment with your company. I have a strong musical background, having 4 years of voice lessons, 5 years of piano, and 6 years of organ lessons. I've been a student member of the AGO for the same amount of time. I have amassed a rather broad, comprehensive knowledge of pipe organ builders, their organs, their countries and the evolution from the early Baroque Era to the 20th century. I love pipe organs, and I think that a career in organ building would be gratifying and something that I would enjoy waking up to do every morning. If you wish, I can mail you a formal cover letter and a copy of my resume. Thank you for your time.

They are thinking about the possibility of replacing a 50 year old Moller, and I would like to plant a few seeds. Can you help? And I did go through your available recordings. The one from Calvin College was not specific about literature. Do you have a recording of the instrument in St. John's in Storm Lake? I love that instrument!! And yes, my wife and I were through Lade City and visited your facilities several years ago when we were working for the Presbyterians here in Indiana, PA and were hoping to interest them in doing something about their rapidly deteriorating instrument. Alas, we left that position rather suddenly, shall we say. Oh well! I'll look forward to hearing from you.

Just thought you would like to know that Opus 9 will be "dedicated" in its new home here in Dubuque (Lord of Life Lutheran Church in Asbury) this coming Sunday, October 29. The organ has already been "sung with" on several occasions - choir rehearsals, children's programs for pre-school and one funeral! - and is receiving rave reviews. People like its sound (as do I, of course!), and we're all looking forward to a full Sunday morning experience with it this weekend. Kudos to Dean Z. and John O. for their fine work with us on the project, and for their friendly and informative interaction with various members of the congregation during their time with us earlier this month.

I am a fan of the pipe organ and was raised in a church with a Dobson instrument. I was excited to see the small, but mighty instrument listed. Bethlehem Lutheran Church, Cedar Falls, IA is still using the instrument until this month when a new, larger organ (by Van Daalen) is built in the nave. I believe you built a magnificent organ for Nazareth Lutheran Church, Cedar Falls, Iowa, and I do not see it listed. Thanks for the great site!

We need to improve the sound system in the room, and the person we're working with has suggested altering the acoustic characteristics of the space. This seems like a bad idea to me.

I'm assuming that you gave some careful thought to the acoustic character of the church room before you designed our organ. I'd like to gain the benefit of anything you might remember.

Thanks in advance. I'll try to reach you on the phone soon, or you could call me during the day at 217-333-9437 or in the evening at 217-359-5965.
